FRONTISPIECE.

ARCH DRUID.

The Ultimate LIBRARY of the OCCULT

This compilation © Phoenix E-Books UK

May not be resold under any circumstances

Please visit our web pages:

http://shop.ebay.co.uk/merchant/phoenix-e-books-uk

http://stevenpoke.com/

ANTIQUA RESTAURATA.

CONCISE HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

THEIR CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS GOVERNMENTS, CEREMONIES, GROVES, DERIVATIONS, AND ETYMOLOGIES, CATEGORICALLY DEDUCED;

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

to which will be annexed, the animated speech of CARACTACUS,

WHEN SENT CAPTIVE TO ROME.

THE REMAINS OF DRUIDICAL ANTIQUITY, IN England, ireland, scotland, wales, and france,

ILLUSTRATED WITH

COPIOUS REMARKS, THE WHOLE DRAWN FROM SOURCES OF RESPECTABLE INFORMATION,^{*}

AND BY PERMISSION INSCRIBED

TO THE UNITED LODGES OF THE MOST NOBLE

AND VENERABLE

ORDER OF DRUIDS.

VERITAS OPPOSITA MUNDO,

JACOB DES MOULINS, P. G. A.

LONDON: PRINTED FOR THE AUTHOR, AND SOLD BY OWEN, NO. 168. PICCADILLY; RYAN, NO, 351, OXFORD-ROAD; AND JONES, NO.6, LITTLE CHAPEL-STREET, SOHO, PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

TO THE

BRETHREN

OF THE

MOST NOBLE AND VENERABLE ORDER

OF DRUIDS,

UNDER THE SANCTION

OF THE

GRAND LODGE OF ENGLAND.

PERMIT me, Sirs, with language unfeigned, to expre/s my grateful acknowledgment for the distinguished bonour conferred on me; who, under the favour of your Patronage, have brought forward, in an obvious point of view, the Learning, Antiquity, and Curiosities, of those Venerable Religionists whose name you deign to retain. It is great pleasure to me, that I have it in my power thus to acknowledge the Kindness and Friendship of so numerous, loyal, and respectable a Body of His Majesty's Subjects, and publicly to declare, with how great Esteem, and true Regard,

(iv)

I AM, GENTLEMEN,

YOUR MOST OBEDIENT,

AND MOST HUMBLE SERVANT,

JACOB DES MOULINS.

THE PREFACE.

HE prefent Treatife I now offer to the Public view was, at first, only intended for the perufal of a few friends; but, from the calamities and misfortunes of a contiguous nation, I am induced, from the refpect I bear my country, to adduce those collateral evidences of truth, that will, at the first view, convince every intelligent Reader of the unavoidable neceffity of due fubordination and conformity to juft just laws----which our predeceffors eminently laid claim to, and shone for the under the wife administration of the Ancient Druids, and formed the basis of our happy Constitution.

Yet, whatever vindictive proofs I may aver of the fublimity of our Anceftors, it muft at the fame time be owned, if they had their bright fide they had a dark one too, which will be fubmitted impartially; and whatever appears dubious, I fhall leave every one at his own liberty, either to judge them fo, or to make (if he pleafe) better gueffes; preferving always a juft and ftrict regard between caufes and effects, &cc. (vii)

BIOGRAPHY will be annexed to prove, in a political view, the junction reciprocally corroborating to repel unjuft authority, and uphold their dignity, till they were over-powered by numbers, and expelled—from whence their Antiquities will be judicioufly brought forward.

To conclude : whatever is offered to the Public of this kind, muft undergo a variety of cenfures ; every one there has a right to judge, though few have the ability to judge rightly: Criticifm is an undefined thing, under no fettled rule, often governed by prejudice or paffion, by humour or fancy; whence it frequently comes to pafs, that (viii) that what is agreeable to one tafte is difpleafing to another. To pleafe all is impoffible; to have faults is unavoidable; to have no errors is a privilege above the condition of humanity; under it, happieft is he who has feweft of them.

ERRATUM.

Page 28. The Matter of the 3d and 4th Notes are transposed.

A SUCCINCT ACCOUNT,

(1)

DRUIDS.

ΟŦ

Of the ancient Druids, their Philosophy, Discipline, Derivations, and Etymology.

THE first account of every nation in the World that of the Jews only excepted, is involved in fable and obfcurity; nor can that of any people be more obfcure or more fabulous than that of the Druids; yet it must at the fame time be owned, that even fable itfelf is fometimes only truth difguifed; and why the fabulous account of Druids may not be originally founded in truth, or be truth difguifed, I leave to the determination of those who have allowed the origin and history of the Romans and Greeks to have been true in the main, though involved in obfcurity, and teeming with fiction.

I must here begin a priori, that is, from the necessary grounds and reasons of mankind's first actions in colomizing the Earth. I shall endeavour to establish such positions as are most coherent with, and conformable to Nature, under fuch and fuch circumstances, and most agreeable to the truth of records and appearances of things. By which method, I am obliged to lay down as a firm foundation; First, that a set form of speech: Secondly, that a determined scheme of laws, and, Thirdly, that a settled system of religion, jointly and naturally adhered to, and accompanied the divided knots and societies of mankind, in the various advances of their progression and travels; and were conveyed with them into those countries they fixed and fettled in.

B

ta

This being fuppeled, it will in the next place be very obvious and natural to think that each of these primary acquifitions, viz. language, laws, and religion, as they were at first more rude and contracted, more rough and unpolifhed, only proportioned and adapted to the mere neceffities of life, and to the then narrow and concife performances of divine worthip; fo when the feveral tribes and classes of people began to fix and fettle themfelves into formed and regular focieties,-Then, I fay, these acquisitions, these rational acts of human life, began to open and display themfelves, to fcour off their original rudenesses, and to appear, here and there, more prompt, ufeful, and comprehensive. The language in a fhort time became more trim, and copious, the laws more nervous and vigorous, juftly fuited to the advantages of communities; and religion, the miltrefs of all, variegated and fet herfelf off in multitudes of pompous fbews and appearances, is allowed, had frequent intercourses and communica-

is

Now towards this improvement of natural and fupernatural knowledge in these early ages of the world, we may observe many helps and advantages to accrue naturally to these first establishers, as well of arts as of empire, in the many regions and countries they came into.

SECONDLY. Their profound elaborate disquisitions into the grounds and reasons of laws and governments, which they were then every where forming, gave them, occasionally, confiderable infight into the manners, inclinations, and tempers of men, and into the natures and differences of human passions.

THIRDLY. Their ferious warmth and concern for religion, prompted and raifed their thoughts to more divine contemplations; gave them prospects of a future being, and at length put them upon many clear and diffinct ideas of divine and fupernatural objects. And as these three particulars; namely language; laws, and religion, have been the earliest and most applied to as being of the most important confideration to mankind; fo they have among other advantages to the happines of the people, been the fresheft and earliest grounds that gave growth and improvement to natural and metaphyfical sciences.

Thus the growing race of mankind having no fooner fat themfelves down in diffinct fettled nations,-----

which

which Strabo, out of Ephorus, branches at first into these, viz. Scythæ, Indi, Æthiopes, and Celtæ.— But a set of men in each of these divisions, we may well imagine, put their heads to work, and began to cheriss feeds of knowledge; partly natural and latent in them, and partly acquired by oral traduction from the patriarchal Cabala; in the latter of which, the antediluvian knowledge, in all its branches, was carefully preferved and eminently flouriss

These men of thought and speculation, whole chief province was to enlarge the bounds of knowledge, as their fellows do those of empire, into what country or climate soever they came; as they were generally curious themselves, in imposing names agreeable to the natures and properties of things and actions; fo they themfelves, likewise, came to be named and diffinguished by others, by appellations peculiarly agreeable to, and fignificative of, fome most noted and remarkable circumstance of their public transactions and appearance.

On this account, I take it, the Indians called their great promoters of civility and humanity Brachmans, probably from a primitive word they might carry with them, Barach, to praife and celebrate, and no doubt the Ethiopians and Scythians gave to theirs alfo fuitable appellatives at that time, though now forgotten; and thus it was that we, the Celtæ, came to call our first masters of knowledge, DRUIDS, from the Celtic word, Derw*as it is generally thought; and that because these men seemed passionately fond of that tree, under which it is certain they frequently appeared in every folemn and public transaction.

It is indeed acknowledged on all hands, that the ancient DRULDS had their name from Derw, whether from the Greek or Celtic, which differ not much in found, is not material to enquire. But that their cuftom of celebrating brating the Oak, and using formed groves for their public ministrations and folemn performances, proceeded fromthe example and imitation of ABRAM's doing the like under the OAKS of MAMRE, Gen. xviii. I. Though it be the general opinion, yet I shall take the liberty to differ from it, and to suppose farther, that both ABRAM and they took up this custom from a more ancient pattern, viz. the antediluvian practice, as the ancient Heathens did many things relating to religion, according to, and agreeing with, the recorded customs of the primitive Jews; not that they took them up from those Jews by way of example and imitation, but as they both as well those Jews as the ancient gentiles, followed a more ancient copy, the Mitzeth or facred patriarchal rubric.

It is known that a tree was of facred ufe in Paradife.— It was a tree, Gopber, which GoD peculiarly defigned for the building of the ark; and on a tree the falvation of the World was to be accomplifhed. A tree, therefore, being fo celebrated by Almighty Providence, we may ceafe to admire that devout Antiquity placed fo much facrednefs on it, as to make groves their first and most ancient temples and places of divine worfhip. And fince it is uncertain of what fpecies that tree was, which was fo remarkably diffinguifhed by Providence, we may as well take here the word of Antiquity, and. fuppofe they pitched on the Oak, paid their greatest veneration to it, and, fome of them if the common fentiments be right, took their name and character from it, upon very prevailing reafons now unknown to us.

The truth of all this is very apparent, both in divine and human records, that the Oak, of all the trees in the World, hath been of most special regard and veneration with devout Antiquity, in their facred religious performances. Of which, to clear the way to the unfolding the grounds and realons of the ancient Druidical inftitution among us, I fhall proceed on with the following inftances.

ţo

FIRST, The Sacred Scriptures affure us, that the firft temples, or local confectations, were groves of Oak, under which God himfelf appeared, Angels were entertained, covenants were formed, oblations and facrifices offered, and whatever elfe belonged to the dignity of God's houfe, and to the facredness of divine worfhip, under the patriarchal accommy, were visible in groves and Oak-holts. "And ABRAM (fays MOSES) paffed through the land to the place of SICHEM, (ad allon Moreb) to the Oaks or Oak-grove of MOREH, where the Lord appeared unto him, and faid, unto thy feed will I give this land; and ABRAM builded there an altar unto the Lord." Gen. xii, 6.

Also we read, that "All the men of SICHEM gathered together, and all the men of MILLO, and went and made ABIMELECH King, by the Oak of the pillar." Judges ix 6. Nay, in that very place, and of that very pillar, the author of the Book of JOSHUA, fays that, "JOSHUA took a great stone, and set it up there," that is, " in Schechem, under the Oak, which was to be taken for the Sanctuary of the Lord." Jo/hua xxiv. 26. On these luculent testimonies of divine scriptures, the learned DICKINSON breaks out — – En primos Sacerdotes quernos ! en patriarchas Druidas !

DIATR. de Orig. DRUID.

SECONDLY.—That the Heathens practifed the fame, in whofe most celebrated authors we find "Sacra Jori quercus," is evident beyond dispute. Nay, they were not only the British and Gaulish Druids who admired and and venerated that prince of trees, but the Heathens about Syria and Paleftine retained the fame fondnefs to it; for when the apoftatizing Jews forfook the Law of their God JEHOVAH and abandoned themfelves to the idolatrous practices of their heathenifh neighbours, what did they do? "They facrificed (fay the facred text,) upon the tops of mountains, and burnt incenfe upon hills, under Oaks and Poplars, and Elms." Hofca iv. 13. "Under every thick Oak they did offer fweet facrifice to all their Idols." Exck. 6. 13.

To reduce what has been faid to the place and fubject of my enquiry, I shall affirm from the foregoing evidence, that this prime celebration of Oak-groves already mentioned, being of patriarchal, if not of divine inftitution ; and our western Celtæ being fo resolutely tenacious of it, and to zealously devoted to it, that their Coryphœi, théir first and chiefest masters of knowledge, the Druids took their distinction and character from it .--The cafe, I fay, being fo, we may well conceive, that these venerable religionists of the age, (religion, in its general Idea, being the chief concernment of mankind, and knowledge its rule and direction; to both of which thefe religious DRUIDS eminently laid claim and title,) had charms enough in their skill and knowledge, in their addrefs and converfation, to obtain to themfelves the chief posts of management wherever they relided, and when obtained, to fecure their credit and reputation; and thereupon to bear up a port and authority (no hard thing for them to do in that easy obsequious age) in order to obtain the chief stroke in the conduct of all public and private affairs among their fellow-citizens, wherever they hapen to fix and fettle.

Upon this bottom, these infinuating priests, we may well imagine, soon wound up themselves to such a reputation and power, as to be able to prescribe and give laws to other others; and when they arrived to this eminence, their next ftep was to provide for and establish themfelves; and easily perceiving that the propagation of knowledge was best upheld and continued, (they being no men of letters) by fixed and settled foundations and focieties, they looked about, we may suppose, for the most convenient places to establish themselves in, the most recluse retreat, were the advantages they sought for, and when they found it out, their authority might foon prevail, to get themselves posselved of it, and established in it.

The advantages they might chiefly feek for, were of two forts:—First; natural, such as were most agreeable to their defigns, and, Secondly, political, such as best fecured the ends of their intended establishment.

FIRST,—From its natural appearance, might endear them to these sequestered haunts, (as being more solitary and less incommoded with the affrightments of war and tumult,) to give first suck to the infant muse, and to afford the earliest strokes and lineaments to the growth of knowledge.

SECONDLY,—A political confideration of the advantages they might acquire, that is, folitude and fafety, we may well fuppofe, did no lefs oblige thefe men of thought and retirement, and in a manner force them to that choice, than those last mentioned beauties of Nature might allure them to it.

Having fet down the grounds and reafons of the origin and inftitutions of these heathenish Priests, I shall proceed to account for their philosophy and discipline, and other particulars of their establishment, referring therefore assurances, on the proofs of facts and evidences.

FIRST,—I fhall give fome previous hints of their religious perfons; first steps in the progress of their improvements in the way of knowledge; Secondly, to obferve ferve and account for their philosophy and discipline .---Thirdly, for their orders and focieties. Fourthly, for their authority and power; and, Fifthly, for their facred things and places. In fome of which particulars, namely, in their philosophy and morality, we may observe these religious Druids to have fignalized themfelves in that great and folemn work of raifing and improving the faculties of mankind; and of advancing and fuiting to proper ends, all the parts of true, folid, and inftructive knowledge, in these western parts of Europe; not only before others, but also above and beyond the then ordinary means and measures. And here let no one dispise, and think the accounting for the affairs and transactions of these men, to be vain and frivolous, who have in their time deferved fo well of the world, and whofe character and actions were efteemed worthy to be recorded and transmitted to our hands even by the greateft of ancient authors.

THE ANCIENT DRUIDS.

FIR'ST, therefore, we are to conceive, according to the hypothefis already laid down, that the first step in the improvement of human faculties, and the application of them in the way of knowledge and practice, to ufeful and inftructive ends and purpoles, was in this weitern part of the world, begun and fet on by a few thoughtful perfons here and there; who afterwards. confociating and affembling together, procceeded to fettle principles, and to form their little platforms and inftitutions in a verbal discursive way; to which they ever after cleaved, neglecting the use of letters, as an innovation inconfistent with their more ancient establishments. And this may be one argument of the feniority of this learned fect, to all those other people, who have fet up by the help of letters, beyond which, excepting the ancient Druids, I think there are few pretenders.

С

Although

Although they made no use of books, yet by what we read of them, we find that their schemes extended to all the useful parts of learning, which they couched under apt fignificant words in rythmical compositions with a peculiar class of their society, whom they call Beirdd, (from the original word Pared,* to divide and diftinguish,) that is, men separated from the rest, for their extraordinary talents of memory, to that peculiar work, of recording and reciting, on occasions' the various theorems and explications of their whole system of knowledge.

SECONDLY.— The delivered and taught philosophy and learning of this Druidical fect feemed, in the general air of it, to be fymbolical and enigmatical, effectally the moral part of it; agreeing in that with the traditional Cabala of the Jews. In imitation of which, the most ancient things amongst the Heathen philosophers, have been shrouded in veils and obscurities.

Says DIOGENES LAERTIUS of these Druids, "They affirm that they taught obscurely and enigmatically their points of philosophy, from hence it is likely other sects and parties; as CLEMENS ALEXAN-DRINUS observes, "usually couched the gravest parts of their learning under these involutions and shadows;" which PYTHAGORAS, afterwards advanced to the highest improvement that way; from whom the imitating Greeks took it into vogue, and amused the world with their mythologies and riddles.

But in particular, as to the parts and divifions of that philosophy, it was, as others generally are, either an exposition or regulation of nature; that is, it was chiefly aimed and directed either to the unfolding the abstructures of her phoenomena, or to regulating the ob-

* A wall or seperation,

liquities

I,I

take

liquities and diforders of her operations. The first being speculative: and properly philosophy; the other practical, and properly discipline: of which in their order.

FIRST, of their Philosophy, properly fo called.— They seemed, if we credit antiquity, to have taken a full draught of the theory of nature, according to the gauge of that time. They made quick refearches into her principles and operations. "Besides the natural, as if that had been their chief province,—they professed also, moral philosophy."

But in the management of the natural—whether the principle on which they generally explicated things were conputcularian, or complex and elemental, I cannot determine; but am inclined to believe them to have been the former, as more agreeable to the Sidonian philosophy, which was plainly atomical; and with which our celebrated Druids, on account of our most ancient commerce and trafic with the Phoenicians, must have had no finall acquaintance and communication.

They deeply confidered nature in her largeft extent, in her fyftems, in her motions, in her magnitudes, and powers; in all which, they feem to cabalize; for Cæfar, who beft knew them, gives us this account of them. "They difpute much of the ftars and their motions, and the magnitude of the world, and of the parts thereof; and of the nature of things." To the fame purpole POMPONIUS MELA, fpeaks of their accute difcourfes of the fyftem of the world, and of their deep infight into natural caufes; to which he adds geography, as Pliny does magic and medicine. All which were acquifitions vergeneceffary to uphold the dignity and power which these Druids had obtained over the people. through a great part of Europe.

Now their phisiology being to comprehensive as to take in, with the theory of nature; aftronomy, medicine. and natural magic; and all this upon the corpufcularian hypothesis; as it may seem very probable, from their ancient frequent comerce by means of the Tyrian and Sidonian traders, with the Phoenician philosophy, particularly with the placits of MOCHUS, the Sidonian. whom our learned SHELDON, takes to be MOSES. fay befides these noble parts of natural knowledge, their metaphysics likewise, made strong slights, partly on the ftrength of their own ratiocination, as in the unity. of the Deity, the immortality of the foul of man, and other confequent dogmata; and partly, also, from cabalistic traditions, as in that of the conflagration of the world, the pre-existance of souls, and transmigration of them from one vehicle to another, the propitiation. of facrifice, and many more particulars of that fort, which they ftrongly profested and taught; though indeed, as to that one, of the unity of the Godhead, the ftream of idolatry, towards the latter end of their time, bore ftrong upon them, and deflected them from their profeffed monotheifm, to give divine worship to medioxumate Gods; but these errors crept lately among them, or they worfhiped the one God under feveral titles and appellations.

That these eminent parts of philosophy, both natural and metaphysical, acquired as I have faid, by the early acquaintance they had with the Phoenician learning, flourished for some time among our ancient Druids, we may well take for granted, on the words of those excellent authors I have now mentioned. But of what fort their notions and explications of things were, though among us all remains and footsteps of them are quite lost and perished; yet we have much to guess; and it should feem that they were the fame, or very near a-kin, with what PYTHAGORAS SAMIUS some time after, about the Sixtieth Olympiad, fetched also alfofrom the diciples of the above MOCHUS (as JAMBLIcus affirms in the Life of PYTHACORAS) and left recorded in hisItalic school; or at least the faid PYTHA-GORAS might well have borrowed the chief points of his philosophy from his nearest neighbours the Gaulish Druids, who had had them before from Phœnicia, and conveyed them that way to Italy. And what it was that made up the greatest part of the philosophy of PY-THAGORAS, befides what has been recorded and preferve tous by his own scholars, DEMOTRICUS and LEU-CIPPUS of old, GALILEO and GASSENDUS of late have sufficiently taught us.

SECONDLY. As to the discipline of these Druids, or that practical part of their philosophy which referred to and concerned, either their own establishment and society, or the people over whom they presided and governed. I find it chiefly confisted of, and exerted itself in these three particulars. First; in the conduct and management of themselves. Secondly; in acts of public decisions and judicature; and, Thirdly, in the solemn rights and performances of religion. Which brings me to the third observation proposed, that is, their orders and focieties.

FIRST.—Then as to the regulation of themfelves, and the prime eftablishment of their focieties and orders; their politics feem to have been very cautious and extremely provident in the uniform model and plot of their conflictution. They fubmitted themfelves to one whom they were implicitly to obey, and to be folely guided by, in the weightieft conduct of affairs. And then they divided their whole body into diffinct classes and fraternities, fuited and proportioned to the feveral parts and employments of their function and office. And in matters of æconomy and classical regimen, they were forted in an agreeable fubordination and dependance of one order and fociety upon another, and of all upon one chief or metropolitan, if I may to call, him.

of

This chief or head Druid, had a supreme metropolitical power, not only over their own collegiate forcieties, but also over the seperate communities and governments of people through the whole nation, as Cæfar exprefly affirms: " over all thefe," meaning the whole order of them, " there is one, supreme head and governor, to whole jurifdiction and authority they were to pay obedience and fubmiffion, in all matters relating to their cognizance, &c." And that all people did yearly bring their appeals from all places of the land, to his tribunal or court of audience in Gallia, as their dernier refort, their last plea of justice. Cæfar is ex-' prefs : " these high pontiffs with their affesfors, the heads and prefidents, probably, of their inferior orders, met yearly in a confecrated place; at whose tribunal, all that have any private fuits or controverfies, make their laft appeals, and fland for ever obliged to fubmit to their decrees and fentence."

This indeed CÆSAR fpeaks of, as it was practified in Gallia, in his time; but withall he fays before, that their difcipline, of which this practice is a main part, came into Gallia from Britain. And fince he affirms it came from Britain, we may very well conclude, that the fame courfe and method, as was ufed in Gallia, was alfo practifed in this ifland.

• That head Druid, for the eminency of his place, and the fingularity of his office, was called ARCH DRUID. He was when dead, prefently fucceeded by another; who mounted into that dignity, either by his fingular virtue and merit; or, if on account of equality, a competition arole, by the fuffrage and election of the inferior orders. In these elections fometimes, fuch heats and broils, and interest of parties, raged among them, that wurs wars and bloodshed have often concluded the contests. But if we consider the extent of their authority, we need not wonder at the struggles they made, in order to attain this supremacy. For their persons were not only held inviolable, but they were the inspectors over the conduct of kings themselves, and had authority to elect or depose whom they pleased; and with respect to his power in civil affairs, might be termed a king, while in religious matters, he might be called the reigning ope. of those days.

- 14

The extent of their authority and jurifdiction, as to exercise and administration, inasmuch as it reached to all places of the nation, so as to cognizance and power. It took up almost every case and circumstance whether civil or criminal. (as CREAR fays) "They determine in almost all controversies, both public and private; and if any great crime be perpetrated, if any murder or manslaughter be committed, if any quarrel arise about bounds of land and inheritance, these Druids give judgment in the matter, and decrees rewards and punishments as the case deferves"

Now, though this decretorial power extended even to life and death, yet the execution of it, (they being a fort of ecclefiaftics) was, for all I can find, wholly transfered to the feculer power of the city or province they belonged to. The fame likewife of their decreeing rewards and punifhments being merely declarative, pronouncing juridically who were fit, how far, and perhaps in what manner, to be rewarded or punifhed. Yet one thing there was that ftruck a general terror, with which they might awe, and over-rule their laics to almost any thing they pleased; and that was what these Druids took the greatest care and pains to inculcate on the people; viz. the people's indispensible obligation to the necessary rights and duties of oblations and facrifice, fice, together with their own indiffutable power of defigning and appointing what perform or things they pleafed for the victims and cruel immolations of their altars, — making them believe, as CESAR fays, — That for the life of a man, nothing but the death of another man, offered a facrifice on their altars, could appeale the wrathful immortal Gods, and make due atonement for the evil committed, or the punifhment threatened.

This, indeed, was their great engine to put the abufed people into what pofture they pleafed; and was the chief proof of their authority, which it feems they kept up here to the very laft. And on which depended their other machines of terror among the inferior laity; which was their anathemas and excommunications.

With this they quickly diffipated all contempt and difobedience; and in that opinion, which they had. industriously cultivated in the vulgar, of their indifpenfible neceffity of facrificing, and frequently attending the folemnities of their altars. There was no greater and more dreadtul ftroke, except death itself, that could be inflicted on a poor mortal, than to be interdicted and excommunicated from the rights and priviledges of facrifices.

And as the first. viz. the general awe which they carried over all forts of perfons, from their being able to appoint whom they would to the flaughter, gave them the great authority of commanding. So this latter, viz. the power of interdicting and execommnicateing, fecured them the fpeedy and effectual execution of what they commanded. (Says CÆSAR,) " this is their greatest punishment upon those who refuse to fubmit to the Druids decrees and fentences, to debar them the use and folemnities of facrifice. And those who are fo interdicted, are accounted the most wicked and and profligate of all people, to be fhunned and eschewed by all honeft men." Nay, to fhew the further congruity of this scheme with future methods, or what came to be afterwards practifed in the true Christian Hierarchy. Says Cæfar of them who were excluded. and anathemized for their contempt and delinquency. and debarred the common rights of religion : Alfo while they continued interdicted, were as outlawed wretches, excluded and rendered incapable of all benefit of law : no place of trust or honour was ever to be conferred upon them. A Thus we may observe, the guilt of contempt and disobedience to just authority. As it was in all the difpensations of the true religion, fo in the eye of nature itself, it has, has ever been reckoned the fouleft and most unfociable crime, and confequently branded with the most odious marks both of divine and human indignation.

۱

THIRDLY, of the Druids difcipline, in relation to acts and exercises of religion, I shall only touch, as I did in the rest, on what is most remarkable. That they had times and places facred and separated to holy uses, it is natural to think; but what precise determined partition of time those were, no author mentions. It is probable they had * one day in seven, as the generality of mankind had, appointed and set apart for divine worship; and that that was, as in most other nations; the day of the Sun. It is as probable, that they also had fet times and peculiar celebrations of deified heroes.

As for their fet and appropriated places, we are fufficiently told, that they were groves of oak. (Says PLINY of these Druids) i. e. "They dress and cultivate groves of oak; for without that tree, or those

• CLEM. ALEX. STROM. lib. 3. where he vouches the authority of HESIOD, HOMER, CALLIMACHUS, and others, for the facred observation of the Seventh Day as a general practice,

groves

groves, they never celebrate any part of their facred They placed a very high mystery in the functions." milletoe of that tree, efteemed it the choiceft gift of Heaven; and imagined the tree on which it grew, was eminently favoured by the Deity, and had, on that account, a particular claim to their veneration. It was fought for annually on new year, the * 6th of March; and when discovered, was hailed with such raptures of joy as are fcarcely to be conceived; amidft an infinite concourse of people, the chief Druid, clad in white, ascended the tree, and with a confectated golden knife, or pruning hook, cropped the milletoe, which he received in his faguin, or white robe, and preferved it as JovE's greateft gift, with the higheft veneration and worship. After which they offered two white bulls, with fillets on their horns, and with frequent invocations invoked the all-healing Deity to render it efficacious in those distempers wherein it should be administered; whence the milletoe itfelf was by the ancients called, " all heal," + or a fure remedy against all difeafes. So great indeed was the veneration they had for this tree, that at last it degenerated into idolatry, and became the immediate object of adoration. Hence it was that GREGORY the GREAT, in his epiftle to Queen. BRUNEHAUT, recommends to her, no longer to tolerate the worfhippers of trees in her dominions.

Being the living depositories of learning, they took all those measures which conduced to restrain it within their fraternity; and though at first obliged by necessity, they afterwards determined by choice, that none of their institutes should be committed to writing. Hence they drew ^{*} TOLLAND fays, it was on the 10th.

⁺ The primitive Christians, on account of its specific virtues, called it, "Lignum Sunctua Crusis". Wood of the hely Gross. (See CUL-EXPRER).

drew to themselves an incredible number of disciples, whom they kept for no lefs than twenty years under their tuition; and as most of these were the chiefs of clans, and other nobles, it was the means of rendering themfelves more awful to the people, and more necessary to the state. The lectures they gave their pupils, were fuch as fuited their quality, fuch as were neceflary for Legislators. And in this cafe, refembled the fo much boafted mysteries of the Egyptians, which the late Bifhop of Gloucester has developed with fo much ingenuity and fuccess. They taught them the nature of the Gods, the immortality of the foul, and other fubjects that contributed to render them Heroes, and | make them despife death, (Says CESAR of them) i. e. "they discourse much of the power and perfection of the immortal Gods, which they preach to the younger people." the manner in which they conveyed these noble truths, was the best calculated to rivet them in the memory, and to remedy the inconvenience which might arise from their not being committed to writing. I mean the delivering them * in verse. It was thus that

• A specimen of the Druidical verses, wherein they inculcate the docgrines of morality, is to be found in LHWYD's Cornish Grammar, but as this book is very fcarce, I have transcribed them to make them more Public.

> x Marchweil Bedw briclas A dyn vynrhoet, o wanas, Nac addev dy rin i was. Marchweil Derw Mwynllwyn, A dyn vynhroet o Gatwyn, Nac addev dy rin i vorwyn. Marchweil Derw deiliar, A dyn wynhroet o garchar, Nac addev dy rin i lavar. 2 Lyri mynydd, Hudd elcyt, that all laws were delivered * before the knowledge of letters; and it was thus that all hiftory was formerly composed +.

19.

Odyd:

They pretended to a familiar intercourfe with the Gods, which they fupported by fuch ftudies as were beft adapted to impofe on the Public. for this reafon they pretended to magic, and cultivated both phyfics and mathematics, aftronomy engaged their attention; and by explaining to them the myfteries of the heavenly bodies, enabled them to foretel the times and meafures of eclipfes, to fuch a degree of certainty, as muft have attracted reverence from ignorance. Their knowledge of the medicinal qualities of herbs, was fubfervient to the fame purpofe; and their fkill in mechanics, which fhews itfelf in feveral ftupendious ftructures, ftill ferved to profper the cheat. For their magic > Odyd amdidawr or byt, Rhybydd i drwch ni weryt. Eyri mynydd, pifc yn rhyt Cyrchyt Karw Kilgrwn Cwmelyt⁶ Hiraeth am Varw ni weryt. Eyri mynydd gwint ae tawl, Llydan lloergan, glafs tawawl,, Odyd dyn, diried dihawl.

I The first three verses contain an invocation to the groves, and an ostentatious difplay of the immunities and privileges of the Druids. 2 These three verses begin with an invocation to the Mount Eyryri, the Parnassus of the Druids; and at the close of every stanza included some moral sentence: they were collected by Lhowarch Hen, a prince of Cumberland, who lived in 500.

* That druidifm was prior to the invention of letters is a fact that may be proved by probable arguments: however this is certain, that before the coming of the Romans, we here of no books composed by them; we see no inferiptions on their altars, or their monuments, though it might be imagined that they were as fond of speaking well of their Deities, or of immortalizing their heroes, as any other set of men whatever.

† None of the old Grecian hiftorians wrote in profe, till the time of GAPAUS, the Physician.

magic * it was fo famous, that they are fuppoled to have taught it to the very Perfians; and the name of their order was, on that account, made use off, to fignify magic itself.

Their privileges were great on this account, and as the exercise of this function seemed to require secrecy, and the preservation of their tenets security; they were exempted from all taxes and military discipline. Hence it is, that in the various engagements of the Romans, we find no mention of Druids among the British armies; but from the relation of vast numbers found in Anglesey, may conclude, that when war broke out in any province, they retired from it into that place, fo remarkable for their residence and antiquity.

Yet it must not be thought, that it was their candour or equity, or the exemplarines of their lives, or the goodness of their moral doctrines that gained them this influence over the people; they had another claim, which was, that they were men of the first quality; and that their legislative quality, was a claim of their birth-right. With these advantages, they became a public bleffing to the kingdom in which they were fettled, composed the civil discords which disturbed it's repose, by their mediation, and fometimes at the risk of their own lives; for they often threw themselves between embattled armies ready to engage; and by their wise remonstrances, put a ftop to the rage of incenside enemies, and brought them to an happy accommodation.

SECTION

• In Ireland the common word for a magician is Driu, and the art magic Driudheacht: and in the Irifh tranflation of the Bible, it is used to express magicians or inchanters, as in Exod. vii. 2, " anois DRAGITH na hegipte." among the Saxons and Germans, DRY is used for a magician and DRY CRAFT for magic or incantation.

(22)

ာဆဆုသမ

SECTION, 11.

Containing their Modes of Worship, Orders, Allegories, Antiquities, Ge.

TN point of religion they were diftinguished above all other nations, the Jews excepted; they believed one fupreme Deity immense and infinite, and thought that confining his worthip to a particular place, was inconfiftent with the belief of those attributes; but their belief of this doctrine was corrupted by admitting an inferior kind of Deities, and paying divine honours to JUPITER, MARS, APOLLO, and MERCURY; under the names of TARAMIS, or TARANUS, HESUS, BE-LENUS or the SUN, and TEUTATES. After the arrival of the Romans we find they increased the number of these Deities, by adopting likewise the worship of DIANA, MINERVA, and HERCULES; though it is a question, whether the druidical OGMIUS was not a Delty peculiar to themfelves, and borrowed by the Greeks from them. They adored their Gods in prayers, in thankfgivings, in oblations. Their oblations were, at first, fine meal or flour sprinkled with falt, or a baked cake seasoned in the same manner. This primitive fimplicity they retained, as appears from the oblations fent by their facred Ambassadors to the Temple of APOLLO, at least to the time of HECATÆTUS. When by their frequent intercourse with the Phœnicians, they loft their native fimplicity, and adopted the barbarous cuftom of human facrifice; and improving on the crueity of other nations, they used them for divinations, with fuch circumstances as must shock human nature to relate. Steeled, as it were, by these practices, they grew deaf to the whifpers of humanity, and carried their favageness to fo high a pitch, that they formed wicker Colollus's of fuch a monftrous fize, as to contain great crowds of perfons, whom they burnt in this monftrous inclosure, at once. At first only malefactors were the objects of their barbarity; but in process of time, innocent perfons became the victims of their superstition. The places set apart for these facrifices, and all other parts of Divine Worship, were confecrated groves; * and as I have faid, the name of their order is derived from this circumstance. The oak was the object of their efteem and veneration; the fences that enclosed these places of worthip, were made of its wood; their altars were ftrewed with its leaves, and encircled with its branches : the brows of the victims, and the heads of their votaries, was crowned with its chaplets.

on

In their religious exercises, they make use of hymns, which were fung in concert, accompanied with the musick of harps, and, on their periodical festivals, were attended with dancing, feasting, interludes, and public games. These hymns were at first the work of the Druids in general, but in process of time, were the

• These were in British named Llwynau, whence the British word Llan, is as prefent applied to fignify a Church, and to this day there are feveral places in Wales, which full retain the name of Llwynau or groves, as Llwyn Llwyd, Llwyn Moel, Llwyn Ogan, in or near which are to be feen feveral remains of the Druidical worthip. In these groves, they had their facred mounts or hillocks called Gorfeddau, from their fitting upon them above their audience, when they delivered their docrees, and pronounced their lectures: In these groves they erected their pillars and idols, their Carne, Carnedde, or heap of frones, and their Gromleacha or altars on which these Druids offered their factifices

AN ACCOUNT OF

* the Bards, an inferior order, who likewife were the prefervers of the memory and noble exploits of their heroes. + The Bard was not only a Prieft, but a Herakl; not only a Poet, but a Musician likewife. The order was fubdivided into three ranks, named Privardd, Pofwardd, and Arwyddvardd; the Privardd, was one who invented and taught fuch fystems of philofophy, as were before unknown : the Pofwardd was no inventor, but a propagator of the principles and fystems of others: The Arwyddwardd, or enfign Bard, was properly an Herald at Arms; his office was to declare the geneology, to blazen the arms of the Nobles and Princes, to keep a record of them, and to alter them according to their dignity and merit. In latter times, these attended the Kings and Princes in all their battles. With regard to the subjects, the Bards treated of, they were called likewife † Prudud or Chronologers: Tewlwr or Heralds, and Clerwr or comic and fatyric Poets. But it should be remarked, that Bardd was an appellation given to all Professors of Learning, as well as to the three orders above-mentioned.

* Bard is the Irith and Scottifh word, and Bardd the Armoric and British, which fignifies both a Poet and a Prophet.

+ This account is transfer bed with some necessary additions from a Cottonian MS. in the British Museum.

[†] The Prudud, as the Cottonian MS. fays, in another place, was to treat of lands, the praise of Princes, Nobles, and Gentlemen, among whom he refided. The Tewlwr treated of common fubjects, domeftic affirs, and fports, having his circuit among the ruftics. The Clerwr cultivated invective and ruftic poetry, and had his circuit among the yeamen of the country. They do not want many infrances of the true fublime among their fragments; their epigrams were admirable, and their turns equal to any of the Italian Poets. But in moving the profilens, they from fuperior to Greeks, becaufe they are more natural.

Belides

Befides thefe, there was a fourth order, who in the Celtic are called * Faidh, or Vaids, which in that language, and in the Irifh fignifies a Prophet. The Vaids were fkilled in phyfic and in divination; their knowledge in augury attracted the notice of the Romans, and their proficiency in philosophy was great, as well as that of the Druids.

This account of the different orders of Druids would be very imperfect, if we did not add, that the fair fex were admitted Members of this Society; that feveral ladies of the first rank, even Princesse, were educated by the Druids, and that fome of their fair disciples became as celebrated for their proficiency in learning, as they were famous for their perfonal charms, or dignified by their high birth. In Inifoen, a place in the county of Donegal, is the grave of Gealcoffa, a Druidefs; near which is her temple, a fort of a diminutive Stonehenge, still held in the greatest reverence by the Irish; and in the Irish annals, we read, that two daughters of King Laoghaire, were educated by the Druids, and are represented with a long dispute they held against the Christian Religion, at that time preached by St. Patric.

It will not be improper to introduce here, the magic of these Druids, or one part of it, which seem to have remained among the Britons, even after their converfion to Christianity, and is called Taish, in Scotland; which is a way of predicting, a fort of vision they call Second Sight: and I take it to be a relict of Druidisfm,

• The word is Faidh, or Vait by the usual convertion of F into V, and T. into D. whence the Greeks formed Owarus, i. e. Ouateis, and the Latins Vates. The Euhages and Eubages, mentioned in Ammus Marcellinus, féem to be corruptions in the Author, or militakes in his Transcribers.

E

ifm, particularly from a noted ftory related by Vopifcus, of the Emperor DIOCLESIAN, who, when a private foldier in Gallia, on his removing thence, reckoning with his hofters who was a Druiders, the told him he was too penurious, and did not bear in him the noble foul of a foldier; on his reply, that his pay was small, the looking ftedfaftly at him, faid, that he needed not be fo fparing of his money, for after he fhould kill a boar. the confidently pronounced, he would be Emperor of Rome, which he took as a compliment from her : But feeing her ferious in her affirmation, the words fhe fpoke fluck to him, and he afterwards took much delight in hunting and killing of boars, often faying, when he faw many made Emperors, and his own fortune not much mending, " I kill the boars, but it is " others that eat the flefh ;" yet, it happened, that many years after, one ARRIUS APER, father-inlaw of the Emperor NUMERIANUS, grasping for the empire, traitorously slew him; for which fact, being apprehended by the foldiers and brought before DIO-CLESIAN, who being then become a prime commander in the army, they left the traitor to his difpolal, who asking his name, and being told his name was Aper, i. e. a boar, without further paufe, he sheathed his fword in his bowels, faying, " Even this boar alfo to " the reft;" which done, the foldiers commending it as a quick extraordinary act of justice, without further deliberation, faluted him by the name of Emperor. I bring this flory here in view, as not an Improper hint, nor unuseful to be observed, because it gave fair evidence of the antiquity of Second Sight; and withal shews it descended from the ancient Druids, as being one part of the diabolical magic they are charged with; and upon their difperfion into the territories of Denmark and Sweedland, continues there in the moft most Heathenish parts, to this day, as is set forth in the story of the late Duncan Campbell.

Secondly, I fhall proceed to relate another that comes to the purpole, (as related by Plutarch.) This learned Greek in his tract of "Ceffation of Oracles," fpeaking of the Genii of thole Gods of the Gentiles, whom they pretended to have informed and actuated thole idols, by whom, before the Incarnation of Chrift, theie Oracles were delivered, gives us a flory of a certain perfon, fent with fome fhips by the Roman Emperor, who, by probable circumftances, feem to have been Claudius, with directions to difcover the Weftern ' coafts of Britain. The relation Plutarch gives of that expedition, is this :--

" There are many Iflands which lie fcattered about the ifle, after the manner of our Sporades. They are generally unpeopled, and fome of them are called the Islands of the Heroes; and arriving at one of the islands, next adjoining to the Isle of Britain beforementioned, he found it inhabited by fome few Britons, but those held facred and inviolable by all their countrymen. Immediately after his arrival, the air grew black and troubled, and strange apparitions were feen : the wind raifed a tempest, and fiery spouts and whirlwinds appeared dancing towards the earth. When these prodigies ceased, the Islanders informed him, that fome one of the zrial Gods or Genii, fuperior to our nature, ceased then to live: for as a taper while burning, affords a pleafant harmles light, but is noifome and offenfive when extinguished; fo, those heroes shine benignly upon us and do us good, but at their death they-turn all things topfy-turvy, raife up tempests, and infect the air with pestilential vapours." The account he gives of the discourse he had with these holy men, about the cause of unusual E 2 ftorins

27

ftorms and tempests. These men account not for it, from natural causes, it being looked upon by them as a prodigy of a very remarkable and unusual appearance; and therefore, they determine of it in a supernatural way, agreeable to the principles of that set of men; who, generally entertained the Pythagorean Hypothesis, and the ancient theology of the Phœnicians and Egyptians; whose opinion of the mortality of the Genii, or arrial demons, shifting from one vehicle to another, which they reckon to be the dying of these inferior Gods *. So upon the whole, it may be, I prefume a collateral evidence of the Hypothesis of the Druids. Having given these accounts from high authority, I shall next proceed to account for their allegory and symbols, &c.

The Druids when employed in Religious Ceremonies, wore a white + furplice, and generally bore in their hands a 1 wand, and had a kind of ornament about their fhoulders, enchased in gold, and called the Druid's § egg, and had a golden chain about their neck. and bracelets about their arms and wrifts ; they wore their hair fhort, and their beards long, and always affected great ferioufnefs. Thus clad, the Arch-Druid afcended their Cromleach or altar, and with great folemnity invoked the Almighty God one and infinite, to fhower down bleffings upon them, exhorting the people to a strict observance of the laws. and their indifpenfible duty to attend the immunities and cuftoms of their altars; to pay obedience to their fuperiors, in all matters relating to their cognizance, by

١

5 The Wand is a Symbol of Magic.

^{*} See Dr. Henry's Moor's Immortality of the Soul, Lib. 3, Cap. 4.

⁺ White, is an emblem of Holinefs.

I Allegorically reprefents the true God.

by which means they kept up a ftrict fubordination, and fecured their own authority: and as their order emblematically reprefented holinefs, their tenets, peace and good will to all mankind, boldly afferting under various aphorifms, poems, and adages of a peculiar caft, engimatically and obscure, closing each stanza, with this just remark, (the truth in opposition to the world).

They have been described by many, to have been Pagan Priefts; but Pagans we can hardly call those, who worthip the true God in fimplicity-yet, among the bulk of the people, there was certainly many fuperfitious outtoms, and many of them are not exploded to this day: But let us examine and draw a just referrence between the British patriarchal religion and that of the Jews-the one is as inimical to the other, as Druidism is to Christianity. I do not mean to fay, that the Druids were in all things justifiable, but I am inclinable to think, they were in the main, excepting their human facrifice; and yet, there is room to doubt, as to that-or of its being exercifed with that favage inhumanity as related, as I will make it appear from the foregoing evidence, being indebted to the Roman Hiftory for the many collateral evidences I have adduced. I cannot fwerve from those principles that I have pledged my word to maintain, without fubmitting it impartially to the candid Reader, to revolve in his mind and give judgment accordingly. The Historian expressly fays, " Briton was as yet fearce known, fo much as by name to the Romans, though they had carried their arms over the greatest part of the habitable world, for they had no idea of any country lying beyond the ocean, which they imagined to have furrounded the globe. Pompey having extended the Roman conquests to the Caspian Sea, relinguished linquifhed his victories on that fide, in order to reduce Syria, Judea, and Arabia, for no other reason, but that it might be faid, he had carried the Roman armies as far as the Red Sea, a branch of the ocean which furrounds the globe. This inftance feems to have operated strongly on the mind of Julius Cæfar, who was no way inferior to him in military skill : Not content with the conquest of countries measuring a thousand miles in length, inhabited by nations, whole martial skill was a terror to all their neighbours: He was ambitious to raife his glory to a point that would admit of no competition, and relolved to give laws to the ocean itfelf, and fpread the terror of the Roman arms into another world, a term by which England was frequently called in those days. Czlar determined to invade England under various pretences, but the enterprize feemed not very acceptable to the Roman people, who looked upon it both hazardous and unprofitable, expecting to find neither riches or men of learning, nor any acquitition, than that of flayes.

Cæfar having gained footing, his next ftep was to fecure himfelf in his poffeffions, and that by ftriking at the root, he being a man of difcernment, foon dircovered that the Druids were the directors of the Britons in their most weighty affairs; and finding he met with many unexpected obstacles, and could affign no other reason, than of the Briton's inflexible adherence to their chief masters the Druids, who were every where exhorting them to defend their liberty, from unjust usurpation, knowing their own dignity depended on the refult. Cæstar himfelf speaks of their learning, and other matters, with great praife, and adds, That the Druids were not to be found in their armics; and it would appear, from what has been faid, that that he himfelf had very little knowledge of them at that time, but we may conclude, that from the many exaggerated accounts even of the prefent day, that Cæfar execrated the conduct of thole men, more from pretext than authority—admitting that Human Sacrifices were criminals to appeale Divine juffice.— (Thefe victims are ftill devoted in London and other great towns;) but most Authors have unaccountably added the Epithet, horrid, to those Druidical Sacrifices, whenever they have had occasion to mention them, seemingly, without ever thinking of its propriety, or otherwise, and forget what has been faid of the sever inflexible morality of the Druids.

Though, at first, the Druid might have no other shelter but his oak, yet, in time, necessity might have made more ingenious, and fet him on contriving fome more commodious retreat. 'Twas then, that his house was erected; a little round arched building at first; indeed, of wood, with a stone foundation, but in length of time formed entirely of stone, the ruins of several such, capable of holding only a fingle perfon, are to be met with in Wales near their chief refidence, the Island of Anglesey. One of them is still shewn in the Island of St. Kilda, which, according to tradition, was the abode of a Druidess. It is built entirely of stone, without lime, mortar, or any other cement; it is arched, and of a conical figure; but open at the top, in order to discharge the smoke and let in light, the fire-place being made in the middle of the floor : It is more capacious than those already described, and is large enough to contain nine perfons without crowding : there are projecting from the fides, three low vaults, feparated from each other by pillars, and capable of containing five perfons each. Just fuch another edifice, except it being larger, and grown over with fod, is in Berera, an Island adjacent to St. Kilda, which was the habitation of a Druid.

in

That the Druids formed themfelves into feparate focieties, and lived together in different places, is manifest from their reliques, which are interspected in feveral parts of this kingdom, Ireland and France; and from feveral towns which bear their * names, both in this and the adjacent islands.

Yet, wherever the Arch-Druid fettled his refidence, he was undoubtedly attended by the inferior orders who lived in towns near him; as for those who lived at a greater diftance, they were obliged to attend him annually at his General Council, wherein he exerted his power both in religious and civil matters, and enacted fuch laws as were necessary for the support of the order, and the good of the state. This General Affembly was held at Dreux, in France, by the Gaulish Druids, and by the British Druids in Anglesey. From this latter place, as from a growing nurfery, were diffeminated the plants of Druidifm into all parts of this Island, and even into the Continent; it being afferted by Cæfar, that the doctrine of the Druids was invented, at least taught with the greatest accuracy and precision in Britain; and that those who were willing to make themselves masters of its mysteries, came hither for that purpofe.

The + Trer Drew in Llanidan parish, must have been the relidence of the chief Druid, because applied

in

Such are Dreux in France; Kerig-y Druidion, or the Druid's ftones, a Parish fo called, in Denbighshire, from two of their altars; Trier Drieu, the Druid's Town, and Maen ny Drew, the Druid's Stone in Anglefea: Caer Drewyn, or the City of the Druids, in Merianythshire; and Stenton Drew, in Semersetshire.

t. i. e. The City of the Druid.

In the fingular number to this order; the many reliques of Druidical fuperfitition, and the names of the neighbouring places, ftill corroborate this opinion, and at the fame time, enable us to difcover fuch traces of the dignity of the prefident, and the internal policy of the order, * as must make us perceive the defects of the Roman and Greek Authors, when treating of this fect.

Round this metropolis of the chief Druid, we find the other claffes fettled, in order to give a more ready attendance: the Bards inhabiting Treir Beirdd, or the Bard's town, and the Vaid's bodevwyr.

As the pontiff of the Druids must reasonably be fupposed, to have a more splendid and magnificent palace, than those of the inferior orders, in the center of Tre'r Drew, there are the ruins of one still to be seen, consisting of an æra, that seems to have been the ground-plot of a wooden palace, having the foundation of a round tower or stair-case in the centre, and formerly having a grove of oak near it, as appears from the mud of the ditches, which seems to be only a mass of putrished eak leaves. On the other end of the town is a large theatre of stones raised to a great height, in the

* GILDAS fays, that rivers and mountains were the object of Divine Worfhip: agreeable to which the river that runs through one part of the ifland is called Breint, i. e. the royal river. CREAR mentions their fupreme court or confiftery; and there is a great circular bank of earth formed on a plain, called Brein Gwyn, or the fupreme confiftory, to this day. Aftronomy, one of their particular fludies, was by the antients named Idris, from Enoch, its fuppofed inventor; here likewife is a hill called, Caer Edris, or Idris, and not far from it a place called Cerieg Brudyn, or the Aftronomers' circle. They were characterized from their peculiarly affecting foliary walks and groves, and here we have a final villa named Myfiryon, i. e. a place dedicated to fludies and contemplation, and a final hamlet, called Trev-ir wydd, i. e. the township of young trees. the fhape of a crefcent, opening towards the weft : In the fame direction from hence are the ruins of a ring or circle of ftone pillars, three of which are ftill ftanding: This place is called Bryn Gwyn, or Brein Gwyn, an expression used by TALIESSEN, to imply a supreme tribunal; by DAFYD LHWYD, to fignify the great council of the nation; and by ADDA FRAS, for the parliament.

Having thus fhewn, that they were indebted to architecture for dwellings, it will not be unfeafonable to mention, that they had likewife * temples : thefe confifted generally of a circular or femicircular row of pillars, open on all fides and at the top, furrounded by a deep trench, like that of Stonehenge, and like the pillars in that famous edifice having no traces of a tool; it being a Druidical, as well as an antient Jewish maxim, not to lift up an inftrument on fuch ftones as were intended for Divine uses. The temple of APOLLO or CLASSERNISS, in the island of Lewis or Harries, is fo rémarkable, that it deserves a minute description. The body of this temple confifts of twelve obelisks or columns placed circularly, about seven seet high, two broad and fix diftant from one another, with one thirteen feet high in the centre, fhaped like the rudder of a thip, from whence the chief Druid used to. deliver his lectures to the people. It has likewife four wings, ftretching out from its fides, confifting of four columns

This was an improvement introduced after their knowledge of Architecture, for at first their temples were only groves; but even after the introduction of buildings, they retained their original principle, that it was contrary to the immensity of the divine effence, to suppose it included within walls; and on that account, their temples were open at the top, and had no other inclosure on the fides, but a sircular row of pillars eracted as equal distances from each other.

3

columns each, pointing directly eafl, fouth, weft, and north, to reprefent the four cardinal winds, as the twelve pillars possibly might be intended to denote the twelve figns of the Zodiac. The avenue, which is aorth, confists of two rows of columns, of the fame fize, and erected at the fame diffances as the former; the breadth of the avenue is eight feet, and the ftones composing each fide nineteen in number, ferving to represent the famous cycle of nineteen years, first discovered by the Druids *. At a quarter of a mile distance from hence is another temple, probably dedicated to the moon; for it does not appear, that the Britains used to have their temples so near to each other, except in this cafe.

Their + altars generally confift of four ftones, three F 2 of

* East of Drumcruy in the isle of Orran, is a circular temple, the diameter of whole area is thirty paces; and in the fouth of the fame village another, in the centre of which still remains the altar, confisting of a thin broad frome, supported by three others. In the greatest island of the Orke neys, commonly called Mainland, are likewife two temples near Lockites nis, one of which is by tradition believed to have been dedicated to the fun and the other to the moon; they are each of them furrounded by a trench, like that about Stonehenge, many of the flones are above twenty or twentyfour feet high, five broad, and one or two thick : Near the leffer temple, fand two frones of the fame bigasis with the reft, through the middle of one of which is an hole, which ferved to fasten victims or the wicker Coloffus mentioned above, in which crowds of perfors were burnt alive. In the ifland of Papz Weitra, another of the Oskneys, are two more obelifks, in one of which is to be perceived a hole likewife; and behind them a third, hollowed like a trough. At Bifcaw-woon near St. Buriens, in Cornwall, is a circular temple, conlifting of nineteen ftones, diftant from each other twelve feet, having mother in the centre, much higher than the reft. To mention no more, there is one at Aubury, in Wilthire: and Gregory of Tours mentions another on the top of Belefis Mount, between Arton and Riom in Auvergne, whence St. Martin took a view of the country,

+ There are a great number of these altars yet remaining entire in Wales, particularly two in Kerig y druidion, and one in Llanhammulch parish in Brecknockshire. To which we may add one at Carn Lhechart, in the patish of Llan-Gyvelach, in Glamorganhire, of which are hard flags or large though thin ftones fet up edgewife, two of which compole the fides; the third, which is fhorter than the others, the end; the fourth is likewife placed horizontally on the other three. Thefe altars are fituated in the middle of the temple near the great COLOSSUS, and are by the Welch called Kifvaen, a ftone cheft in the fingular number, and Kiftie-vaen in the plural. They who imagine from the bones they find near thefe altars, that they were fepulchres, forget what ancient authors informs us of the Human Sacrifices offered by the Druids.

Befides these altars, are others of a larger kind, termed by the British Cromlech in the fingular, and * Cromlechu in the plural, near which was commonly placed a prodigious stone, which ferved as a pedestal te some idol, or at least to the wicker COLOSSUS. In Nevern parish in Pembrokesshire, there is a Cromlech of which

* Some derive the name from the curvedness of its figure; but others more rationally from Crymmy, bowing or bending the body in Divine Worthip at these places. The Irish call them Cromleach in the fingular, and Cramleacca in the plural. There is one at Poictiers in France, fupported by five leffer frones, which is fixty feet in circumferance. As many of thefe ftones thus crected, weigh from ten to twenty tuns, it might embarrals the curious to know how they could be raifed in thefe rude ages to their feveral heights; but as the Leaver was simechanical power, which was invented in the earlieft ages, and as antient as building itself, we may with the ingenious Mr. Rowland, fuppofe that they either found or made mounts with an inclined plain on the fidee, and flatted or level at the top, up the florping fides of which they might gradually roll or raife thefe ftones, they intended to crect at the top of the hillock, where they dug holes in the earth at the end of every frome they intended for a supporter, equal to its length, and then flipping them in fo, that their tops might be level with the ground, they then rolled the other Rone intended for a cover over them, and then digging away the earth between the fupporters, left the whole flanding, fo as to form an appearance not unlike Stonehenge, Rollrick, and the Cromleaches in Wales, Ireland, or Jerfey; in which last place they are named Pouquelsys.

ŀ

which the middle stone is still eighteen feet high, and nine broad towards the base, but growing gradually narrower upwards. Near it is a fragment about ten feet long, which twenty oxen cannot draw. At Bodowyr in Anglesey, is another, on the top of a hillock, which is seven feet long, fix broad and tix thick, its upper stone being in the stape of a detruncated pyramid, and stat at the top.

On the tops of the mountains of Scotland, Wales, Ireland, the Scotch islands and the Isle of Man, are. great heaps of stones, another relique of the Druids. They confift of stones of all weights, from one pound to an hundred; they are coped or round in form, and fomewhat tapering or diminishing in circumference upwards, but on the fummit have always a flat stone. Thefe * heaps are of various fizes, force of them containing at least a hundred + cart-load of flones. They are called in the antient Celtic language, and in every one of its dialects, a Carn, either from the devotional rounds performed about them, or elfe from the Hebrew, Keren Nedh, which implies a coped heap, and is undoubtedly the origin of the Welch word Carnedde, by which these collections of stones are denominated. They were always fo difpoled, as to be in the fight

• The fmaller heaps, according to the common tradition, are the graves of perfons eminent for their virtues, or notorious for their vices; and were originally formed by a cuftom then in vogue, which was for every perfon who paffed, to fling a frome on the grave, as a fign of his veneration of the good life of the former, or his deceftation of the depravity of the latter. This cuftom is ftill preferved in Wales, where it is cuftomary to throw flones on the graves of fuch as are denied Christian burial, till they amount to confiderable heaps, which has given rife to the proverbial curfe Kern ar dy ben, i. e. ill beide you.

ł

↑ There are some of these cumuli or heaps to large, that they required a more numerous army chan ever was in this iil.nd, to bring every one his flose to raife it.

fight of each other, as appears from those which are int Bryn Kelli, formerly called Llwyn Llwyd, in Llandeniel parish, which are situated within a few paces of each other; one of these is entirely demolished, but that which remains is twenty paces high; and one space in eircumference at the base.

But these carns I shall endeavour to prove, might in all probability, have been a part of their facred function, and the possibility rights of religion and worship in those times. And though the particular manner and circumflances of that fort of worship, viz. by throwing and heaping up stones, are found extant in no records at this day, except what we have of the ancient way of worflaipping MERCURY in that manner : yet fome hints there are of it in the ancient history of MOSES, particularly in that folemn transaction between LABAN and JACOB, which may be supposed to be an ancient patriarchal cuftem, universally spread in those coarse unpolished times, and consequently might, and did, as the visible remains of it are still witness, prevail in remoter countries also, and even in this I am now speaking of.

The paffage I now offer for it, is very plain and full to the purpole, as to thole countries which MOSES mentions. And while our monuments agree exactly with thole defcriptions, I take it not unreasonable to ascribe them to the same causes.

"And JACOB faid unto his brethren, gather ftones; and they brought ftones and made a heap; and they did eat there upon the heap," Gen. 31, 46. Now the defign of this whole affair was to corroborate the pact, and covenant mutually entered into by these two persons, JACOB and LABAN, with the most binding formalities and obligations. These obligatory ceremonies being then, I suppose, their law of nations; and these forms universally applied to by persons of different interests and and parties, as the most folemn fanction of law. The whole tenor of it runs thus: "Moreover, LABAN faid unto JACOB, behold this heap, and behold the pillar which I have fet up between me and thee; this heap shall be a witness, and this pillar shall be a witness, that I will not come over this heap to thee; and that thou fhalt not come over this heap and this pillar to me, for ever !" Ver. 51, 52. This whole affair has no femblance of a new inftitution, but is rather a particular application to a general practice; because concluded by a facrifice, the highest act of their religion, and not to be attempted by every private fancy; and not only concluded by a facrifice, but that facred 'action feems to have been a main part of it, and the chief end for which it was inftituted; and together with the other circumftances. made up one folemn religious ceremony; " And JACOB offered facrifice upon the mount," that is the heap, " and called his brethren to eat bread." Gen. 31, 54-

Having thus produced from Scriptural evidence, I shall further proceed to account for their antiquity.

ŀ

!

There is also in the parish of Trelech, in Carmarthen-, thire, a Carn called Crig-y-dyrn; the flat ftone on the top of which, is three yards in length, five feet broad, and from ten to twelve inches thick; its circumference at the bottom is about fixty yards, and its height fix; the declivity is eafy, though it might originally have been ascended by a ladder. Though the carns were, on account of their proximity to each other, uled for beacons, yet originally they were defigned for fires of another kind. For, on May eve, the Druids made prodigious fires on these eminences, which being, as we have faid, in fight of each other, could not but afford a glorious fhow all over the nation. These fires were in honour of Beal, or Bealan, the Irish and Celtic word for the fun, which the Romans latinized into Belenus, and then applied it to the fame fame deity, as appears from feveral infcriptions found on their monuments. Hence it was that Bealteine is used for May-day by the Highlanders in Scotland; and in the Isle of Man, as well as in the Armoric, a priest is called Belce, or the priest of Beal, i. e. the fun.

Two of these fires were kindled on May-day, in every village of the nation, between which the men and beafts to be facrificed were obliged to pass; one of them being kindled on the Carn, and the other on the ground *.

On the eve of the first of November, these fires were kindled likewise, accompanied with feasting and facrifices; and were called in Ireland, Tini tlach'd-gha, from † tlach'd-gha, a place of that name in Meath. At this time, all the people of the country extinguished all their fires, and every master was obliged to carry a portion of this confecrated fire to his own house, for the service of the ensuing year, for which he was to make an acknowledgment to the Druid, who, from officiating at these places, was called Cairneach. But if any person had ‡ not cleared with the Druids for dues of the last year, he was

* Hence arole the Irish proverb, " Ittir dha teine Bheil)" between Bel's two fires, applied to a person, who was in such a fireight, that he knew not how to extricate himself.

† i. e. Fire-ground.

[†] The places denominated from these Carns are numberless, not to mention Carn-Lluhart, and Carn-Llaid, in Wales; Carnwath, Carn-tullach, im Scotland; or Carnant in Ireland. In Northumberland, and other parts of the North of England, they are termed Laws or Lows. The lowland Scots call them Carns, whence Drum-cairn, Glen-cairn, befides several lordfhips, one of which is in Lennox, and another in Galloway, notto mention the family of the Carns. The family of Carne in Wales, is from the tame original. The policy of the Druids in fixing this ceremony for rekinding family fires on the beginning of November, rather than Muy, or Midfummer, when the convenience and opportunity were equal, is certainly admirable. was neither fuffered to carry away a spark from these holy fires, nor durst his neighbours permit him to take the benefit of theirs, under pain of excommunication.

Befides these fires, they kindled others on Midsummereve, which they made in all their grounds, carrying flaming brands from thence through all their corn-fields, and accompanied them with facrifices, in order to obtain a bleffing on the fruits of the earth, which were now approaching to maturity: those on the first of May being made for their vegetation; as those on the first of October were intended for a testimony of gratitude on their finishing their harvest.

It was cuftomary for the lord of the place, his fon, or fome other perfon of diffinction, to take the entrails of the facrificed animal in his hands, and walking barefooted over the coals thrice, after the flames had ceafed, to carry them to the Druid, who waited for him at the altar. If the nobleman elcaped harmlels, it was reckoned a good omen, and celebrated with loud acclamations; but if he received any hurt, it was deemed unlucky, both to the community and himfelf likewife.

Such are the reliques of the Druids in these kingdoms, which ferve to convey to us an idea of their dignity, their magnificence, and their superstition: as for their particular tenets, they seem buried in the wreck of time, excepting a few notices, which may be collected from a variety of authors, are those which follow:

I. None must be instructed but in the facred groves.

II. Milletoe must be gathered on the fixth day of the month, if possible, and cropped with a golden bill or pruning hook.

III. Every thing derives its origin from Heaven.

G

IV.

IV. The Deity is one, and infinite, and confequently to confine his worfhip within walls, is inconfistent with his attributes.

V. The arcana of the fciences must be committed to the memory, but not to writing.

VI. The powder of the mifletoe makes women fruitful, and is a panacea in medicine.

VII. The difobedient are to be excluded from the facrifices.

VIII. Souls are immortal, and after death transmigrate into other bodies.

IX. The world is eternal, a parte ante, and shall never be destroyed, unless by fire and water.

X. On extraordinary emergencies, a man may be flain, and future events predicted from the manner in which the body falls, or moves after it has fallen, as well as from the manner in which the blood flows, or the wound opens.

XI. Malefactors or prifoners, and in cafe of neither, innocent perfons are to be flain upon the altar, or burnt alive inclosed in a wicker Colosfus, in honour of the Gods.

XII. All commerce with strangers must be prohibited.

XIII. He that comes last to the assembly of the states, ought to be put to death.

XIV. Children are to be educated apart from their parents, and never to be admitted publicly into their company, till they are fourteen years of age.

XV. Money lent in this world will be repaid in the next.

XVI. There is another world, and they who kill themthemfelves, to accompany their friends thither, will live with them there.

XVII. Letters given to dying perfons, or thrown on the funeral piles of the dead, will be delivered faithfully in the other world.

XVIII. The moon is a fovereign remedy for all difeafes.

XIX. The difobedient are to be excommunicated, deprived of the benefit of the law, avoided, and rendered incapable of any employ.

XX. All masters of families have a power of life and death over their wives, children, and flaves.

SECTION

44)

SECTION, III.

Of their Extinpation, Biography of Eminent Men, Ec.

NOTWITHSTANDING what has been afferted of the religious tenets of the Drudty, whofe capacity could fubvert the most evil propensity by wife dictates; however, extolled for their virtue and morality, in their days was permitted a numerous and incessfuous concubinage, a fault which not only CÆSAR, but other authors have described as a fign of their barbarity, (and which every rational mortal must execute as a horrid depravity).

Commerce with the Phœnicians was confiderable, they being the greateft traders in the world, vifited this ifland for the fake of its tin; and the Britons, by frequent intercourfe with that barbarous nation, in courfe of time, fwerved from their native fimplicity into a depraved flate, addicting themfelves immoderately to the debauchery, and cuftom of that then wicked people; and the inebriety which they plunged themfelves into by their ufe of malt liquor, tended to fubvert their ardor, and depriciate their true dignity.

The Druids fanctioning these enormities, finally wrought their own diffolution, they being capable of fuggesting wifer precepts.

These circumstances proved favorable to CÆSAR, who lost no time in collecting what might be of interest to him, in prosecuting his designs; yet, it must,

at

at the fame time be observed, that it required all his courage and skill to oppose to formidable an enemy, as the Britons were.

CASAR finding the Britons of an unfufpicious generous turn of mind, and that good treatment would avail more than feverity, not having the fubtility of other nations, and having informed himfelf of the habits and dispositions of the people, he feldom failed to revert their candour to his advantage, and in the sequel to their destruction.

CÆSAR having fecured himfelf from the incurfions of the Britons, fent out parties to annoy them, which were fought with various fucceffes, the Britons having inacceffible woods in their flank, which feldom failed to prove advantageous to them; and by what he had collected concerning the Druids, that they were their chief directors : he never failed, when he found them, to refert it with the greateft cruelty.—But here, there is a great that in the Roman hiltory, for there is no confidential account of them for many years.

It is probable, indeed, that these Druids, who before were every where sucking the sweets of the land, upon the approach of the Roman storm, were fain, like bees, to rally home, and to withdraw to their hives to secure themselves, while they were able in their inmost groves as their fasest fanctuary, and good reason they had so to do. For STRABO assures us, they were all extremely hated by the Romans, i. e. " by reason of their superstitious factifices." The Romans strongly endeavoured to destroy their religion, but could not. And hence it is no wonder, that no Roman author takes notice of them, until TACITUS finds thein out at their last place of refuge, the Isle of Anglesea, which I shall hereafter treat on.

A fucceffion of rain and ftorms, retarded the progrefs

of

of the Roman arms, and gave the Britons fresh courage in collecting greater numbers, and marched to give the Romans battle, under the command of CASSIVELLAUN, a bold and experienced general; but a devision arising in the army, CASSIVELLAUN left them to shift for themsfelves, and retired with his army to his own territories.

CÆSAR being informed of this feparation, refolved to purfue him; and advanced with his army to the Thames with an intention to pafs, but found CASSI-VELLAUN had forefeen his defign, and taken every precaution that courage, fagacity, and prefence of mind could fuggeft; but the Romans were determined not to be repulfed, crofied the river, and the Britons being unable to fupport the affault, confulted their fafety by a precipitate retreat.

CASSIVELLAUN fill continued his march, and CÆSAR continued to lay wafte the country through which he paffed by hre and fword; his repeated victories, the inteftine broils of the kingdom, and the immediate prefence of a powerful invader, were circumftances that tended to damp the fpirits of the people, and induced feveral colonies to fue for accommodation, which was readily accepted by CÆSAR.

Like a brave man who is loath to be fubdued by his misfortunes, and a true Briton is always unwilling to fubmit; yet there was now no other ftep left, being deferted on all fides, but CASSIVELLAUN deferred fubmiffion to the lateft hour.

CUNOBELINE, who had reigned in Britain during the time of two Emperors, and by his wildom, courage, and public fpirit, had rendered himself and the nation happy, found the latter part of his reign clouded with missfortunes. This prince had feveral fons,

46

among

among which were ADMINUS, CARACTACUS^{*}, and * TOGODUMUS. ADMINUS having behaved fo ill, that his father was obliged to banifh him; he repaired to Caligula, and incited him to refent his fuppofed injury, but CUNOBELINE died, and was fucceeded by his fon GWYDER, a brave and generous prince.

PLAUTIUS being difembarked, meeting with CA-RACTACUS, and afterwards TOGODUMUS, defeated them both. CARACTACUS retreated, and TOGODUMUS was furrounded on all fides, and routed with great flaughter. As for PLAUTIUS, he had great difficulties to encounter; he was to deal with CARACTACUS, a prince of uncommon abilities; he was endued with the most undaunted courage, and the most invincible fortitude: He was naturally turned for war, and by long experience, had acquired fuch a degree of military skill, as to refist the power of the Roman empire. OSTORIUS SCAPULA was pitched upon to fucceed PLAUTIUS in the command; but he found, that clemency, nor feverity, could not work on his enemies; they were endued with stubborn bravery, that scorned the fuperior power of the Romans. They fought with the refolution of men, who efteemed the enjoyments of laws, liberties and religion, as the greatest bleffings under Heaven.

CARACTACUS being reinforced, and OSTORIUS being informed of his junction, marched immediately to attack him: On the approach of OSTORIUS, he drew up his army according to their different clans, and placed at the head of each, their native lord: then visiting each rank in perfon, he animated them to exert themselves to the utmost, by telling them, that the

* Called likewife Caratacus, or Caradox, from Cerait, wife, prudent, or experienced; and Tog, a general.

the enjoyment of their liberty, or a perpetual flavery, depended on the fate of that day. His exhortation was received with the loudest acclamations, and every clan vowed seperately, that they would not yield to any difficulty, nor receive quarter. OSTORIUS being ftartled at the alacrity they fhewed to engage, feemed averfe to attack them, but his foldiers appearing impatient for action, he de nolifhed their rampire, and forced them to an engagement. The event of the battle was fatal to Britain in general, and particularly unfortunate to CARACTACUS, whole wife and daughters were taken prifoners. The unhappy prince elcaped only to become miserable; he fled to CARTISMUN-DUA, queen of the Brigantes, in confidence of receiving fome inftance of friendihip and protection. But the treacheroufly feized his perfon, and betrayed him to the Romans, who fent him, with the relt of his family in chains to Rome. The behaviour of CARACTACUS an this metropolis of the world, was truly great. When brought before the Emperor, he appeared with a manly, decent, and composed countenance; and if we credit TACITUS, addressed himfelf to CLAUDIUS. in the following harangue :---

" If in my profperity, the moderation of my conduct, "had been equivalent to my birth and fortune, I fhould "have come into this city, not a captive, but as a "friend: nor would you have difdained the alliance of a man born of illustrious anceftors, and ruler over feveral nations. My pretent fate is to me difhonourable—to you, magnificently glorious. I once had horfes; I once had men; I once had arms; I once had horfes: "Can you wonder that I fhould part with them unwillingly? Although, as Romans, you may aim at univerfal empire; it does not follow, that all mankind muft "tamely fubmit to be your flaves. If I had yielded without refiftance, ance, neither the perverseness of my fortune, nor the glory of your triumph had been to remarkable. Punish me with death, and I shall soon be forgotten. Suffer me to live, and I shall remain an everlasting monument of your clemency."

The manner in which this noble speech was delivered, affected the whole audience, and made such an impression on the Emperor, that he ordered the chains of * CARACTACUS and his family to be taken off: and AGRIPPINA, who was more than an equal affociate in the empire, not only received the captive Britons with great marks of kindness and compassion, but confirmed to them the enjoyment of their liberty.

From the defeat of CARACTACUS, the Romans became mafters of Britain; and it was now time to revenge themfelves, on their greatest enemies, the Druids.

PAULINUS SUETONIUS, a man of a cruel, impetuous, haughty difpolition, was pitched upon to take the command; and having in the first fection observed, that the Druids, on the approach of danger, retired to a place of fastety, which, by TACITUS, is faid to be Anglesey.—And here the author gives a ludicrous account of these religionists: but here—in this island, when the Romans knocked at their very door, were ready to break' up their nests, and unmercifully fall upon them; then it was no longer time for them to stand upon priviledges, and cry immunes bello, that they were no votaries of Mars, no men of war : no, they

As every thing relating to fo great a man deferves notice, it would be injurious not to mention the reflection he made on viewing the city, and admiring the beauties of Rome. "Nothing, faid he, furprizes me fo much, as that the Romans who have fuch magnificent palaces of their own, fhould envy the wretched have and cabbins of the Britons."

H

they must now to arms, and defend themselves, their groves, temples, and altars.

Here TACITUS finds them out ; as if his pen, having taken the hint from C #SAR had travelled all the conquered provinces of Britain, in quest of these Druids, and of the place of their abode and studies. And at last, by tracing the steps of PAULINUS over a small arm of the fea, he fell on the very fpot, and there, at the first dash, gave us an army of them; for mentioning there, the Britons refifting the landing of the Romans in the island, he fays, their army (meaning the Britons) was furrounded by another army (for he defcribes them no lefs) of Druids of both fexes: And those too in great numbers-that he calls them, " a fquadron, of viragos, and madmen." The Druids shewing here no doubt, some part of their usual behaviour at their facred ceremonies, i. e. in pouring out vollies of execrations on the infulting Romans; as the women did alfo, in running about like furies, with burning torches in their hands, clad in fearful habits, with their hair waving behind them.

But when the fpiritual fword proved too fhort, the Druids fell a lamentable facrifice on their own altars, to the Romans extremest outrage and cruelty, whom they threw on their facrificeing fires, destroying their beloved groves and altars.

PAULINUS, in the height of all these excesses, was haftily recalled to quell an infurrection of a very serious nature——" PRASUTAGUS their king, * late deceased, had bequeathed his estate, as a joint inheritance between the Emperor and his own daughters, in hopes, that by the facrifice of one part, he might fecure

• Of the Iceni, who inhabited Cambridgefhire, Norfolk, Suffolk, and parts of Effex; and the sountry as far north as Lincolnshire. fecure the other to his family; but his precaution was rendered abortive by CATUS, the Procurator of the Province, who took poffeffion of the whole, on pretence of executing the will of the deceafed. BONDUI-CA the widow of PRASUTAGUS, remonftrating againft this conduct, as an act of injuffice; he ordered her to be fcourged, violated the chaftity of her two daughters, treated her relations like flaves, feized the houles of her hufband, pillaged his kingdom, and turned the nobility out of their paternal eftates."

Thefe fhocking barbarities exaggerated by the queen, and what had been practifed against the Druids, contributed to make this revolt universal. For the Druids interspersed throughout the kingdom, no sooner heard of the massacre of their brethren, and the destruction of their seminary, then, it is natural to suppose, they ftirred up the people to a general infurrection; and the people as naturally, rose in defence of their religion. That this is one of the motives which animated the Britons on this occassion, seems evident from the prodigious numbers brought into the field. BONDUCIA and her army intoxicated with success, threw assist every sentiment of compassion. No less then eighty thousand Romans are reputed to have fallen victims to their fury *.

PAU-

205

• This celebrated heroine goes in different authors by different names, being called Boadicea, Voadicea, and Bonducia. She is represent d as tall, of a remarkable beauty, of a malculine deportment, a commanding feverity in her countenance, a loud farill voice, and having a large quantity of yellow hair that flowed down to her wafte. She wore about her neck, a maffy golden chain, and a flowing robe of various colours, over which was thrown a mantle of coarfer fluff. In her hand the bore a fpear, and from a throne of turf harangued her army, recapitulating the wrongs they had fuffered, reminding them of the bravery of their ancefors, expatiating

5I

H 2

PAULINUS posted his army in an advantageous spot of ground; the Britons elated with their late conquests, came in order to attack him, to the number of 230,000. at the head of which appeared BONDUCIA, drawn in a chariot with her two daughters, and after making a speech in which she recited her injuries, spirited them up to revenge, and animated them with hopes of divine affistance. She led them on to the charge, but the military discipline of the Romans prevailed, no less than 80,000 Britons fell on that day; BONDUCIA not being able to bear the thoughts of submission, put an end to herself by poison.

In this interim, the Roman forces being all gone from the island, the Druids, upon that welcome funfhine, after to terrible a ftorm, might fafely peep out; and forfaking their caves and coverts, might come once more in view, to contemplate on the fate of the place, and put their heads together, to concert the best and fittest measures to dispose and order themselves and their affairs for the future. They saw every where the deplorable effects of fire and fword. They beheld in every corner the marks of the Romans implacable hatred to them and their religion, wounding their fouls with ghaftly prospects of ruin and desolation. Their groves deftroyed, their altars, pillars, and other facred inftruments and objects of their worfhip, laid level with the ground; and their erected ftructures and habitations, demolished and sunk into ashes and ruins. This upon their late fuccefs against their oppreffors, exhorting them to the defense of their liberty, at the expence of their lives, and animating them with hopes, that the Gods would give fuccefs to their arms. Having thus intlamed their courage, she let loose a hare, which she had concealed in her bosom, and gave thanks aloue for that happy omen, to Adraste the Britist Goddels of War. Dio. 1. 62,

This must needs exceedingly afflict and grieve these diffreffed people, already extremely intenerated by the disappointments of their adored powers, to find themfelves and their sacred places configned and abandoned by their gods (whom they in vain sought to appeale with their profuses adoration) to the rage and fury of their incensed wrathful enemies, under whose lash they had so lately smarted.

Thefe, or the like reflections, it is natural to conceive, wrought in the minds of thefe religious people when their thoughts began to clear, and determined them to quit the island; for although, under the charms and infatuations of their religion, they gave fpecimens of very abfurd and impolitic carriage, which must not on that account be excufed them; yet, in other refpects they must be allowed to be a fober, intelligent fort of people.

AGRICOLA fifteen years visited this island, and the only perfons found there, were the Ordivices; as for the Druids, there is no mention of; hence it is probable, that they left the island immediately after the attempt of * SUETONIUS. From hence is appears, 10me of them went to Ireland, where they were remarkably numerous, at the time of St. Patrick; and others to the Isle of Man, to Scotland, and the Scottisch islands. After the propagation of Christianity, they were obliged to a third remove, and seem to have fled to Iceland, where several of their monuments still remain; and after having spread in Norway, Denmark, and other northern countries, were entirely extinguished.

Such

53

A.D. 68.

Such are the wrecks of this celebrated fect, that have elcaped the deluge of time; though few, they are valuable; valuable not only on account of their intrinfic worth, but likewife as other rarieties are, on account of their antiquity and fcarcenefs.

SECTION

(55)

SECTION, IV.

Druidish Hierarchy how far maintained, under the Bardic System.

HAVING in the foregoing Section (literally) deduced from the most probable circumstances, of the extirpation of the Druids, I shall briefly touch on what is most remarkable of their tenets under the Bardic system, in resultation to misinformed antiquarians.

First, we are to observe, that from the descent of the Romans in Britain, their political conduct was not in the least inferior to their military prowess; they found the Britons readily yielded to the temptations of luxury: they artfully increased these temptations, by introducing the sciences of eloquence and architectures and the islanders were so enchanted with the manners and customs of their encinies, that they not only applied themselves to learn the Roman language, but many of them wore the Roman dress.

Secondly, they diligently studied the genius and difpositions of our forefathers, and had observed from experience, that the Britons were more difficult to be forced, than induced to yield; generofity attracted them into friendship and compliance. Severity drove them to obstinacy and rebellion. They were extremely apt to imbibe and imitate the manners of foreign nations. They who were nearess to Gaul, assumed the Gallie fashions and behaviour; and as the Romans were still a politer a politer people, their national cuftoms and elegancies were ftill more acceptable to the Britons: So that, in a few years, they had both the pride and fatisfaction of feeing the Roman porticoes, baths, and other ftructures of magnificence imitated, and in a manner transferred into various parts of Britain.

"The ignorant, (as TACITUS fays) looked upon this as the dawn of humanity: the wife know it to be one of the chief roots of flavery."

Thirdly, that the druidical fuperfitition vanished on the glad tidings of the Prince of Peace, whole Disciples came to Britain and preached redemption to all mankind, which our ancestors seem to have acquiesced with, if not chearfully, at least prudently in their present situation and being a maxim with the Bards (as it was with the Druids) to maintain peace and good order, the Bard readily admitting whatever tended to promote the fame, i.e. "to believe nothing, and to believe every thing; that is, to believe every thing supported by reason and proof, and nothing without." and nothing could be more cheerful to our predecessions in their calamitous situation, than the glorious rays of the Gospel, which confirms me in my opinion, that superfition dissolved before its true light.

It is reported that St. JAMES, the fon of ZEBEDEE, with his Mother SALOME, came into Britain to give tidings of CHRIST, about fix years after, after the refurrection, and alfo that SIMON ZELOTES came to Britain about four years after, preaching the Golpel, and was taken up and martyred by the Magistrates, or Druids, who were then of great power. And it is alfo affirmed that ARISTOBULUS the brother of St. BARNABAS was fent by St. PAUL and St. BARNABAS to be their bifhop about the year A.D. 51 and that St. PAUL travelled to Britain and eftablished a Church therein, A.D. 59. Now

THE ANCIENT DRUIDS.

51

ferting

egancies hat, in a cition of ructures nsferred upon so be

ed on ciples ikind, th, if ation t tis, t is, t

Ε,

e

1

ł

fince we are protty fure from the best foreign authority, that St. PAUL, came to Britain about the time now mentioned, there is not a doubt but he planted a Church, and propagated the Christian Faith; and that from the extirpation of the Druids, the Britons embraced the Christian Religion, as appears from feveral relicts that have been found in their places of worfhip. It is probable, that there were particular Christians in this island even before this time, as appears from the brass medal of our Saviour, which was found at Tre'r Drew, or the Druid's town in Anglesea, with the following Hebrew legend :- " This is JESUS CHRIST. the Mediator." This curious relick, very poffibly. belonged to fome Chriftian who was murthered in this ifland before the Druids were extirpated by SUETONI-US; and TACITUS informs us of POMPONIA GRA-CINA, the wife of A. PLAUTIUS was perfecuted for professing Christianity, as early as A. D. 57. CLAU-DIUS RUFINA another British lady, a convert of St. PAUL, is mentioned in St. PAUL's Second Epiftle to Timothy, 4, 21; and I may infer from the foregoing testimonies, that Authors have erroneously transcribed, who aver, that Druids were in Britain later than A. D. 62, though it must be acknowledged, that Chriftianity did not flourish here until the time of Con-STANTINE, who died at York, A. D. 337.

As having in the former Sections given a minute detail of the feveral orders of Druids, under the appellation of Bards, mult let it fuffice to fay, that the Bardic fystem remained in Britain for feveral centuries after the introduction of Christianity; and their religious functions, fimilar to that of the Druids, i. e. they heid their Gorfeddau in the open air, while the fun was above the horizon, as they were to perform every thing in the eye of the light, and in the face of the fun, &c. afferting comprehensively, their religious tensts, viz. God cannot be matter—and what is not matter, must be God.

1

AN ACCOUNT OF

Propitiary facrifice was a part of their religion, and their metempfychofis, was an incitement to good morals, and was a reftraint on them not to kill animals, except thole that might caufe the death of a man.— They wore uni-coloured robes—emblematical of holinefs, peace, truth, &c. The lectures they gave, were ftrict morality, condemning the errors of the Romifh Church, by which means they incurred the hatred of the Priefts and Monks; but in the fequel, we find, that their writings are an ornament to the age, always conveying lively fentiments of piety and virtue.

The following is a specimen of Bardic verses in praise of LLYWELYN I.

May CHRIST, who form'd, and governs Earth and Heav'n, Protect me from misfortune's gloomy way; That CHRIST myfterious, makes me wife and mild, E're to the narrow house of Death I go! May He with eloquence attune my tongue, To praife my chief, whose course is noify war; And may he grant me from pure Nature's flore A penetrating gen us unreftrain'd.

FINIS.

The Ultimate LIBRARY of the OCCULT

This compilation © Phoenix E-Books UK

May not be resold under any circumstances

Please visit our web pages:

http://shop.ebay.co.uk/merchant/phoenix-e-books-uk

http://stevenpoke.com/